

Attendee

Rachel Booth

Psyhonomics, New Orleans, LA

November 15th -17th

The conference held thousands of cognitive science researchers from across the world who presented poster presentations, oral presentations, workshops, and keynote speakers. The depth and breadth of cognitive science was displayed by the wide array of projects.

The weekend allowed me to associate with top scholars in the psychology community. Specifically, I met with several professors to whom I have applied to for graduate school, helping my application stand out while also helping me decide where to attend graduate school.

A large part of the reason that I was able to attend this professional conference is because of the Shackouls Honors College. This college is responsible for creating an atmosphere of close mentor-student relationships, fostering a love for research, and raising the bar to produce professional level presentations. My ability to attend Psyhonomics was made entirely possible by the Shackouls Honors College, and for that I am greatly thankful.
